

University of Utah professor begins Family Practice in Heber

Dr. Janet Kelly, a resident of Heber City for two years, will be opening her office for the practice of Family Medicine October 31, after leaving her position as Assistant Professor and Director of Family Practice at the University of Utah.

Shortly after moving to Heber in 1981, she joined the faculty in the Department of Family Practice at the University where she taught medical students and residents, did research, and still made time to see her own patients.

She has now decided to set up her practice in the Heber Valley where she can spend less money away from her two small children and stay in the valley she has grown to love.

Dr. Kelly was born and raised in goats, chickens, and a dog, but now have two beautiful children: Katie age three and Darrin age 18 months.

Dr. Kelly became the medical director for the Heber Valley Care Center in May of 1982 and has had considerable impact on the development of the center since that time. After spending her days seeing many young adults, adolescents and children, she finds working with the geriatrics population very challenging and rewarding. Family Practice is in an ideal position to work with the geriatric population as one must often deal with the whole family and the psychosocial issues surrounding the patient.
